FOUNDER & PRINCIPAL DESIGNER

How do you approach each project?

Each project always begins with the client's vision—it's the heart of any interior. Taking the time to nurture my relationship with them and truly understand their wants, needs, and dreams for their home is fundamental to success. From there, we visit showrooms together, and I use tools like 3D renderings to ensure they're on the same page at every stage. It's about taking the guesswork out of the process.

How would you describe your design aesthetic?

I would define my design aesthetic as organic modern. I gravitate towards earthy, neutral palettes, using tone and texture to bring depth and warmth to every space. Leaning on these natural colors, textures, and materials is a fantastic way to ground a home, connecting its interior with nature to foster a calming, restorative energy.

What are some of your favorite design resources?

Travel is my number one design resource—there's nothing I love more than immersing myself in fresh surroundings. It's an opportunity to explore new shapes, materials, and design styles firsthand and gather inspiration I can take back to my clients to offer them the very best from around the world. I'm also constantly learning from my design community. In fact, I'm headed to Madrid this November for the Design Leadership Summit, one of my favorite annual events!

Any fun facts you would like to share?

Yes! My team and I will be opening a brand-new design studio in Scottsdale this fall! I can't wait to welcome clients to the space and continue to showcase the design process in a more immersive way. My husband and I are also building our very own dream home in Sedona at the moment. It's been a fantastic opportunity to innovate and explore the well-being amenities and design choices I advocate for my clients each and every day.
