DESIGNING & BUILDING YOUR PERFECT HOME

Story and Photos provided by Stephanie Larsen Interiors

Summer is quickly making its exit for another year, and as we move towards the start of a new season, many of us are feeling the familiar urge to reinvent and start anew. As award-winning interior designer Stephanie Larsen tells us, oftentimes this desire for new beginnings starts at home.

Stephanie has long since been a mainstay in the interior design community, recognized nationally for her ability to transform spaces through an artful celebration of the traditional and modern that brings to life the simple joys of everyday living.

This season, Stephanie tells us that it's the landscape of her home in Sedona that's feeding her design inspiration most, bringing together organic textures and natural materials to capture the essence of modern mountain living here in the southwest. Tying together the cool minimalism of modern design with the earthy comforts that bring softness to a space, Stephanie sat down with us this month to share which pieces she's been loving for the autumn and beyond.

DAVID DAUNCEY ARTWORK

Inspired by textures uncovered during his travels, the artwork of David Dauncey offers a unique exploration of the creative process. Through abstract compositions and layers of paint, Dauncey seeks to cover new ground and find resolution on the canvas, producing works that feel organic and deliberate all at once.

THE MODERN GRAY COLLECTION DINNERWARE

One of the best ways to soften a modern living space is through the integration of organic textures. Combining the cool greys of natural stone, subtle leather detailing and a unique sense of asymmetry, the Modern Gray Collection from Valerianne of Scottsdale provides a great opportunity to incorporate a few natural elements into your dinnerware collection.

FALLING STARS SCONCE
 Inspired by the natural flow of molten lava, designer Stefan Gulassa's cast-bronze Falling Stars Sconce for Holly Hunt Design explores the contrast between light and dark for a golden glow that reminds us of the stars in the night sky. In Sedona, residents are fortunate to have an amazing landscape for stargazing thanks to a Dark Sky Ordinance, and this sconce offers a lasting way to bring a little bit of that magic into our interiors.

BRIMSTONE CONSOLE
 Contrast is key to adding interest to a room and the Brimstone Console from Holly Hunt Design does exactly that. Contemporary and architectural with its defined geometric shape, this console is a wonderful compliment to minimalist interiors, artfully contrasting the industrial qualities of steel patina with the organic textures of natural wood.
