A more thoughtful pace of life, a smaller community, an opportunity to be present in day-to-day living—these were the desires driving Stephanie Larsen’s own move from Orange County to Sedona, Arizona, some 25 years ago. And today, as the area experiences a boom of new residents seeking the same things Larsen was, she and her team at Stephanie Larsen Interior Design are creating retreats for living well. “Great design is about telling a story of who we are, what we love and the experiences that shape us,” she says. “It’s about striking the perfect harmony between beauty and function, and offering space to celebrate the joys of the everyday.” Her clients, it seems, are sharing the sentiment. “They are seeking design solutions that allow them to embrace home in a way previously overlooked. From finding the perfect lighting solutions for work, to designing smooth indoor-outdoor transitions, it’s about intentionality.”

Top A sophisticated taste of desert living, this Sedona home artfully blurs the transition between indoors and out. Right Curated comforts and modern, organic accents offer a cozy invitation to unwind in timeless Arizona style. Center A place to gather in tranquility, this dining area with complementary host and hostess chairs provides a subtle contrast to the bright and airy space. Far right Cool neutrals and picturesque views sit head of the table.

“We have more than 200 hiking trails, 264 days of sun each year, small-town tranquility and big-city amenities.”

ARIZONA AMBIENCE

Asked to describe her approach to design, Larsen says, “I gravitate toward a modern organic style, choosing soft, subtle neutrals and focusing on layouts that maximize natural light. We opt for top-quality materials, like wood, stone, metal and linen, that allow the beauty of the surroundings to truly shine. It is an understated way of rooting every project in our local heritage.”
